It is said that "Love is blind," and we mortals of to-day, having great respect for age, accept with due submission the venerable assertion. But then (let me whisper in your ear) we don't believe it one bit! We let dear Antiquity in more ways than one have her say, while we silently protesting, have our way.

Really, love has microscopic eyes. It sees all the beauty and every blemish. It reaches out to correct the faults; and when this may not be, it tenderly covers them from view-just as moss covers the ugly rock, and vines creep over and drape with beauty the rotten log in the woods.

'No, no, Molly, don't tease me! When I make pleasure a business, I do not get it; but when I go earnestly about duty, pleasure drops right into it. Tis such a queer thing, this pleasure. It cludes you if you seek it. If you turn from it, it didly selfish.

Tis a grand and solemn thing to live, More solemn still to die; To know our lives must pass review Before God's omniscient eye.

To live is but to bear The dread responsibilities of life; And meet with fearful conflicts Waged 'mid the world's valu strife.

A fearful mystery envelopes
All we know, this life beyond,
And we falter, shrink and tremble
As we near the dreaded bound.

Why do we live? Why must we die? Are thoughts which often come, and go Unanswered, as when first we cought Their meaning full to know. Thus must it ever be, until we pass
The confines of the temb,
A flower transplanted from the earth,
In Paradise to bloom.

'Oh, yes you are, though!' screamed to little ones, in chorus.

'But I say I am not,' said the Bishop, severely, and frowning; 'you ought to be ashamed of yourselves. Don't you know where little story-tellers go? It is seandalous for you to violate the truth in this manner. My name is Potts.'

'Yes, we know it is, exclaimed the children—'we know it is; and so is ours, that is our name now too, since the wedding.'

'Since what wedding?' demanded the Bishop, turning pale.

The Bishop did not seem to be unually glad; somehow, he failed to enter into the enthusiasm of the occasion. There appeared to be, in a certain sense, too much sameness about these surprises, so he sat there with his hat pulled over his eyes and considered the situation. Finally, seeing there was no help for it, he went to the house, and forty-eight of Mrs. Potts rushed up to him and kissed him, and told him how the prophet had him, and told him how the prophet had

'What affair?' asked Potts.

'Why, that wedding; McGrath's widow, you know—married by proxy.'

'You don't say,' replied the Bishop.
